

THE ETHICS CENTRE

Ethics shape the world we live in.

So what role does ethics play?

Ethics is where the values and principles we live by, and the challenges we face, push and pull against each other, urging us to choose, or to stand firm, or to grapple with the question – what is right?

Ethics extends a great invitation we will never regret accepting – to know our world and ourselves.

The choices we make, shape the world we live in. How we respond to pressure, how we engage with the unknown or opposed, and how we navigate complexity have an impact on our world.

Ethics are challenging and never neat. But engaging with the ethical dimension of life is where we can find the very best of ourselves.

Ethics is about relationships.

Ethics is about relationships – our relationship to ourselves and the lives we choose to live, our relationships with each other, and the world we all live in.

The wonderful thing about being human is that we can think, we can feel, we can choose, we can learn and we can live a life with meaning. Our lives are ours. And the way we choose to live them can be considered and meaningful.

Unique as individuals, we also have the privilege and challenge of being part of something greater than just us. We are not alone. Being alive means we are inherently in relationship with others the moment we are born.

And together we exist in the context of our world – complex, changing, beautiful and sometimes, seemingly a bit broken. This is the unique experience of being human, and the very real complexity we navigate every day.

Know Your World. Know Your Self.

Since classical times, philosophy has been fundamentally concerned with getting at the essential truths to the big questions of life, the universe and basically everything. For all the big words, large books and long beards, thinkers have simply been trying to help us know ourselves and each other, so together, we can live better lives.

Ethics is at the centre of being human, and an essential part of everyday living. Join us as we explore together what we value, the principles we hold to, what a meaningful life is, and how to make our way through some of the most complex, ethical challenges we face in a modern and changing world.

EVENTS + FORUMS

Talking about the things that matter can give us the insight and tools to work through ethical challenges in our own lives. We offer a program of innovative events that allow people to come together and explore the most important ethical issues we face today.

ADVICE & EDUCATION

The workplace is where we encounter some of the most difficult ethical challenges of our lives. We provide ethics advice and education to help individuals and organisations navigate complexity and be consistent and ethical in their decisions and actions.

Ethics is at the centre of being human.

More than 25 years ago, philosopher and Executive Director Dr Simon Longstaff set up a humble circle of chairs in the centre of Sydney's bustling CBD and invited people to join a conversation. Everyone was welcome. It was a safe place to talk about the things that matter – issues of concern, large and small, that cut to the heart and centre of being human.

Today, The Ethics Centre is a not-for-profit organisation developing a range of innovative programs, services and experiences, designed to bring ethics to the centre of professional and personal life, and align actions with values.

At our core, we remain committed to injecting a pause into the centre of public life and allowing people to stop, connect with others and explore the ethical dimension of our everyday lives. From those early days to now, we continue to work for a world where we know ourselves and others – where we have the courage to stand up for our values and principles, the wisdom to explore the unknown, the opposed, or the complex, and the imagination and heart to strive for the very best of all we can be.

ADVOCACY PROJECTS

From education systems to the way countries are governed, sometimes the only way to improve lives is to effect ethical change at a systemic level. We create and contribute to local and global initiatives that place ethics at the centre of public life and spark positive social change.

Ethics is about us all.
